Fabulous! Do not be fooled by the look of the original and the replicas! Going back to WWII, there were 10 different main calibers in use for Lugers,.25ACP, 9x19mm, 10x19mm, 7.62mm Mauser,.45ACP,.38ACP,.45 ACP, 7mm Mauser. Then there were several variations in each of the 10 calibers. However, in general, the Luger is a 9mm/.40 pistol, and you need to keep that in mind while reading serial numbers. Which means that finding an original with an original serial number might be nearly impossible. . A: I think I figured it out. It appears that the serial numbers were printed with a format like so: Datum = (year) || (seq_number in two digit format) || (gun number) || (blank) (i.e. complete with two digits for the year.) And some letters were printed before and after the (blank). This would allow for ten different barrels/frame stamps, depending on the condition of the gun. So, instead of having a general serial number that says "this gun is from 1943 or 1945, and it had serial number 2123", they used a piece of paper with the correct letter and the date when the gun was manufactured.

For example, if the gun was manufactured in 1935, it would say DWM-XXX. The numbers in the format are really just a number (e.g. 1047), but the number would determine which frame and barrel stamp to use for the serial number. This would allow for extensive variation in serial numbers without being too expensive. If someone has knowledge, I am curious to know if this is correct. The circadian clock controls daily timekeeping in most organisms. As a consequence, the cellular clocks of diurnal organisms are under the control of the circadian system. Interestingly, several groups have recently provided evidence for interactions between the clock and cell cycle in the fission yeast (Schizosaccharomyces pombe), the roundworm (Caenorhabditis elegans), and the mouse liver. Here we describe a genetic approach to elucidate these interactions in the fruit fly, Drosophila melanogaster. We show that a clock controlled cell cycle mutant possesses a higher mitotic index than a cell cycle mutant in the absence of a clock. Thus, the circadian clock positively regulates the cell cycle in Drosophila. To our knowledge, this is the first description of a circadian clock controlled cell cycle effect in a multicellular eukaryote.The present invention relates to an improved, lightweight, easy to assemble hospital bed. More specifically, the present invention relates to a hospital bed having a track system for pulling an operative bed into position between an upper fixed bed frame and a lower fixed bed frame. Most modern hospital beds include a frame that is supported on wheels. The frame includes a seat which supports an operative bed. A foot rest is also typically provided. To position the bed, the bed is rolled towards a corner of a room. Other systems also provide for automatic retraction and extension of the bed for positioning the bed between a
